

LIQUOR ON THE SKY.

Some Interesting Discoveries that Have been Made by the Excise Board.—The Little Barts don't Pay License Fees.

In the following cases that are darker and the source of gain that are vain, the Hutton Chimes has no more successful rival than the naturalized Gothicite who lives by selling subscriptions and meretricious whisks to the very poor and the very vicious residents of the slums. He is not satisfied with catering to their depraved tastes by furnishing them with the very basest of base compounds; he must also do it in violation of the benevolent law which gives him the right so to cater. He actually demurs to paying the lawful price charged for the privilege; and to avoid the charge which precedes the payment he frequently uses an honest business as a shield just as the ancient pavisor protected himself against a charge of larceny by placing his concave palm before him. The little Bart, the Commissioner Vorhois, yesterday, a star reporter learned some facts in connection with this number of industry which are well worth making public. Reporter.—In the discharge of your duties as Excise Commissioner you must be thrown in contact with quite a number of men.

Commissioner Vorhois.—Yes, necessarily so. The people who require most attention from this office are not held in the highest esteem among our citizens. They have a moral code of their own, and each one amends and modifies it to suit himself.

Reporters.—Has the new board made a complete inspection of the drinking places of the city?

Commissioner Vorhois.—The inspectors have reported in regard to every such place, and the results are as follows: 1,000 places were all below Fourteenth street last night.

The French and English claims covered more than four-fifths of the $115,000, the balance of the appropriation being the approximate amount of the American claim. There is a well of justice and dishonesty surrounding the payment of these claims.

It seems that one Allen and several others are descendants of colored emigrants who came here in 1790, and whose descendants have been here ever since. In 1840, and who renounced all allegiance to the country which gave them birth, and took up their abode in the United States.

They are the property keepers who sell liquor without license. I am told by rumshippers who were once grocers that they used to supply poor sailors and soldiers with rum and change on their husbands bills as often.
